Year in Review 2021-2022

In 2021-2022, the Supreme Court Advocacy Institute completed its fifteenth year of activities, during which it provided counsel appearing before the Supreme Court of Canada with rigorous practice sessions. The Institute's advocacy program increases the effectiveness and quality of advocacy by simulating for counsel the experience of oral argument before the highest court. A panel of seasoned Supreme Court advocates hears counsel's argument and offers candid and constructive feedback to assist counsel in making their oral submissions effective and helpful to the Court.

Demand for the Institute's advocacy program continues to grow. Over the past year, the Institute provided free, non-partisan advocacy sessions in 81% of cases before the Court. Participation rates were especially high in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec, where nearly every appeal benefitted from the Institute's advocacy program. The Institute's advocacy program was used for a wide range of appeals in civil and criminal matters, by counsel working in private practice as well as in government, and by seasoned advocates as well as by those appearing for the first time before the Court.

Eighty-nine (89) lawyers donated their time as advocacy advisors for the Institute, offering advice to counsel based on their own experience before the Court. Many participated in more than one session, illustrating once again the dedication of our advocacy advisors to the bar, to the public, and to access to justice. The Institute continues to receive extremely appreciative feedback from counsel who have used the advocacy program. Counsel are grateful for the time and effort the advisors devote to the sessions, and note that the mock hearings are a highly valuable aspect of their preparation.

In line with public health advice, the Institute continued to host virtual advocacy sessions. This allowed for a number of inter-provincial panels, with advocacy advisors from different cities coming together to participate in an advocacy session.

The Institute's advocacy sessions are organized by session coordinators in each province. For their invaluable assistance in delivering the Institute's services, we thank Aubin Calvert (British Columbia), Julie G. Hopkins (Alberta), Shoshanna Paul (Saskatchewan), Sacha Paul (Manitoba), Erin Dann (Ontario: Toronto), Colleen Bauman (Ontario: Ottawa), François Goyer (Quebec), and Michael Marin (Atlantic provinces).

This year, the Institute was delighted to welcome the Honourable Michael J. Moldaver as Honorary Chairperson following his retirement from the Supreme Court. He is the fourteenth former Supreme Court Justice to join the Institute in this capacity.

A number of Institute members were appointed to the bench in the course of the 2021-2022 year. We congratulate former advocacy advisors Justice Jonathan Coady (Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island) and Justice Andres C. Garin (Quebec Superior Court). We also congratulate advocacy advisors Christopher Brecht and Brian Gover on their receipt of Law Society Medals from the Law Society of Ontario.

We estimate that in the 2021-2022 year, the Institute's advocacy advisors, committee members, and executive directors contributed approximately $811,800 in pro bono services to the benefit of parties and their counsel before the Supreme Court of Canada, bringing the Institute's total pro bono contribution since 2006 to approximately $7.66 million.

The Institute's ability to provide its advocacy program to all counsel without charge is made possible by the generous funding provided by the Advocates' Society, the American College of Trial Lawyers Canadian Foundation, the Canadian Bar Association, the Law Foundation of Ontario, and the Ontario Bar Association Foundation. The willingness of all participants to donate their time on a pro bono basis allows the Institute to maintain low-cost operations. We thank Torys LLP for continuing to provide the Institute with pro bono services in support of our charitable status.
